Duchess Elizabeth supervised the lakes, proposed by Capability Brown, between 1821-1825. She never saw them filled with water because she died before they were finished

The new Memorial Lakes, named in memory of Duchess Elizabeth and Estate staff killed in action during World War Two, were restored between 2013 and 2015

This view from the North Terrace shows the stables that were built at the same time as the third Castle during the reign of King Charles II. The horse chestnut avenue on Belvoir Road, was planted in 1977 and 2012 to commemorate Queen Elizabeth II's Silver and Diamond Jubilee

View of St James' Church in Woolsthorpe village

A distant view of Nottingham over the embankment, proposed by Capability Brown and built between 1801-1804. It took eight men two-and-a-half years to move 23,000 tons of earth from an early 18th century Bowling Green, near the canons, to fill the steep ravine to improve access for horse-drawn carriages

Frog Hollow was restored in 2013/14 in Capability Brown style
